Extracts from the Memorandum, "EFFORTS FOR PEACE"
by AYAMARO KONOYE (pp. 11-12).

The truth of the Lukouchiao Incident has not yet been made clear. Yonai said he did not know the truth either.

Negotiations on the point of completion were broken off. Which side struck the first blow? I am inclined to suspect our own.

In North China a certain group who are continuously engaging in a plot of one sort or another exists, and as a result there was a succession of troubles between the Japanese and the Chinese. Every time there is an occurrence, a settlement is sought by means of an agreement, such as the "Umezu-Ho Ying-chin Agreement" and so forth, but the whole situation may be regarded as one continuous trouble.

Looking back upon the spreading of the trouble, Kanji Ishihara said that he had been deceived, that the orders to stop the spreading of the trouble, which were supposed to have reached down to the last soldier, were always betrayed and that he had been taken in by those "outwardly obedient but treacherous at heart." He lamented in this manner afterwards.
